

Making Love Work, Version 3.0

The CT Collective went to an unusual event this past weekend- a wedding in a meadow on Maryland's eastern shore. This wasn't your average, tedious wedding. This was a sort of Civil War re-enactment without the war and with the guests and everybody in costumes.

On one end of the field were the bride's posse, clad in leaves and forest-like attire. At the other end of the clearing was the groom's posse yelling and beating drums, led by a crazed, pelt draped and torch carrying groom. He proceeded to publicly proclaim his surrender to his lady love. It was beautiful and intense.

Our friends over at JPS Consulting have the right idea. Without giving too much away describing Making Love Work Version 3.0 ©, we'll simply say that one of the suggestions from the game is "Sit facing one another. Hold hands. Tell your partner what you think is his/her sexiest feature."

Of course, to try out the product we're discussing, we had to give the aforementioned love suggestion a try... and boy oh boy! What results we got! Hubba hubba. Hello Nurse! It was a regular love-in at the CT compound this weekend.

Ahem... anyway, it's time for you to download the petit and romantic (maybe even a little dirty) Making Love Work game from JPS Consulting. Let us re-assess our priorities from death and destruction to love and life.
